- 4. Mathematical Reasoning

This course provides a comprehensive delivery of all four components and numerous practice resources to use for each of these main topics.

GED COURSE

What is GED

The GED is comprised of the GED test and the GED credential. The GED test includes exams on four different topics, including math, reasoning through language arts, science, and social studies.

Once you pass all four exams on the GED test, you've earned your GED credential. This credential serves as a diploma showing you have a 12-grade level knowledge base—even if you didn't graduate from a traditional high school.

The GED test covers a wealth of information within the four-test sections. These test sections include

- 1. Reasoning through the Language Arts,
- 2. Social Studies
- 3. Science Studies
- 4. Mathematical Reasoning

You will not need to know all of the information in these areas to pass the GED. You will also need to know and understand several of the main topics in each area. ## GED Vs. High school Diploma

The GED is a high school equivalency diploma, so you can use it to apply to college or for a job resume, just like you would with a high school diploma. And if you're wondering which schools and jobs accept the GED, we've got good news! More than 98 percent of schools in the United States accept the GED, including community colleges, universities, and private schools. Couple your GED with a good SAT or ACT score, and you'll have an excellent chance of getting into any school you wish.

If you're ready to dive straight into the workforce, the GED is a great option in that area too. Employers view the GED as equal to a high school diploma, so you shouldn't have trouble applying for jobs—as long as you have the skills and experience necessary for the position. And, earning a GED also has the potential to boost your earnings significantly. Many GED graduates go on to make $9,000 more per year than those without a high school diploma.

A high school diploma is an ideal option to prepare you for a career and college studies. But this route takes four years to complete, and some people don't have the option to attend high school if they drop out during their teenage years.

Luckily, GED graduates can prepare to earn their certificate in just a few months, and the test can be taken even by those past high school age.

Ultimately, both options are a great way to gain knowledge and life experience to open up new opportunities, including higher pay, continued education, and career advancement.

GED POLICIES

Age limits:

If you are at least 18 years old you may sit for the test with no restriction. You need to be at least 16 years old to request an exception. Before being allowed to test, you will need to fill out the Age Exception Waiver form and have it signed by a parent or guardian and then send it to help@ged.com. Once the form is reviewed and approved by us, you will receive a notification in your GED.com account letting you know that you can schedule your test.

University Acceptance:

Thousands of universities across the world accept the GED. Check with your preferred university, even if not listed here, for their admission requirements to confirm they accept the GED.

CEFR TEST

What is CEFR:

The CEFR, Common European Framework of Reference for Languages, is one of many frameworks that describe your language proficiency. There are several frameworks with similar aims including the American Council on the Teaching of Foreign Languages Proficiency Guidelines (ACTFL), the Canadian Language Benchmarks (CLB), and the Interagency Language Roundtable scale (ILR).

While the CEFR is a European scale and specifically designed to apply to any European language, it is now becoming a worldwide standard framework for language abilities, especially European languages, including English. The CEFR is not tied to any specific language test – and most standardized language tests now provide CEFR level equivalents.

Who uses the CEFR?

The CEFR is used extensively in language teaching, both in the public education sector and in private language schools. In many countries, it has replaced previous leveling systems used in foreign language teaching. Most education ministries in Europe have an explicit CEFR-based goal for all students leaving secondary school, for example B2 in their first foreign language, B1 in their second. For job seekers, many European adults use a standardized test score, like the TOEIC, to describe their English level. Adoption of the CEFR is also growing outside Europe, with some individual countries in Asia and Latin America adopting it in their education systems.

CEFR TEST

How can I find out my CEFR level?

The best way to find out your CEFR level is to take a well-designed standardized test. In English, the EF SET is the best choice because it is free and the first standardized test to be fully aligned to the CEFR. You will need to set aside 50 minutes to complete the test and find out your CEFR level.

Most common English assessment tests now provide the CEFR equivalency. For other language assessments, check with the official instructional body for the language in Europe, for example the Alliance Française for French, the Instituto Cervantes for Spanish, or the Goethe Institute for German. Non-European language assessments are providing CEFR equivalencies, such as HSK Chinese Proficiency Test.

CEFR includes?

The CEFR describes what learners can do across five language skills: Spoken Interaction, Spoken Production, Listening, Reading and Writing. For all five skills at each level, there are sets of detailed 'Can Do' statements.
